Rio

Wes falls in love with Louvenie Spanger, the daughter of the town gunsmith, so he decides to settle down and become the town's marshal. He is supposed to be skilled in all the things the professor taught him and his fellow crew members, although some have never been shown. Eventually, they discovered that Rio had visited the mint a few months ago with , jeopardising the heist.

Hellsing Combat Pistol 'Jackal'

During the learning process and preparation for the heist, he developed feelings for his fellow robber and they began a secret relationship despite 's request for participants not to fraternize.

The group released in 1987, which as of 2017 had reportedly sold more than 30 million copies. The group continued work on new album , but didn't perform again until May 2006 when Buckethead's replacement debuted. Mantia ultimately chose not to return to the band, and Ferrer took over on a permanent basis.

Forty Guns

He considered surrendering himself, but later decided to continue with the heist. Both songs were later recorded by the western singing group, , and released on their for RCA 47-7079 on November 1, 1957.

Clarke was reportedly fired by Rose without the consent of the other band members, and Slash objected to the addition of Tobias, which led him to focus on his new side project. Thereupon, Brockie and his drunken friends start trashing the town. Griff intervenes and pistol-whips Brockie with a single blow while Wes covers him with a rifle from the gunsmith shop.

Rio

His nickname given by his mother was Rayo, meaning lightning bolt in Spanish. Its unique design makes it seem as if it doesn't have a pistol slide; however, the entire upper assembly is the slide, and moves only a minimal distance compared to other guns', making it appear as if there is no pistol slide. He is saved by youngest brother Chico, who was supposed to be leaving for California for a new life on a farm.
