D'autres trouvent en lui un précurseur de , et de l'école. In the second stage - the philosophy of will - 1804-18, to avoid materialism and fatalism, he embraced the doctrine of immediate apperception, showing that man knows himself and exterior things by the resistance to his effort. To man's two states of life: representation common to animals , and volition volition, sensation, and perception , he adds a third: or life of union with , in which the life of absorbs representation and volition.
