We describe family-centred care interventions that aim to provide optimal stimulation for development in a safe, stable and nurturing environment. Evidence that supports the method by which you identified and chose your subject of analysis should clearly support investigation of the research problem and linked to key findings from your literature review. Early intervention for children with developmental disabilities Evidence is limited, but growing, on the effectiveness of ECD interventions for children at risk of and with developmental delays, particularly in LMICs.

U.S. Merit Systems Protection Board

We call for global collaboration among international research communities, including funders, to adopt a systematic approach to strengthening the available evidence base of interventions for children with developmental disabilities and their families. MSPB's goal is to help agencies use training resources more effectively. Accessible technology eliminates barriers for people with disabilities and it enables individuals to take full advantage of their capabilities.
