The Diary and Letters of Madame D'Arblay — Volume 1 by Burney, Fanny, 1752

Though unsigned, the reviewer is Ralph Griffiths, the editor. Our hero, disappointed in his design upon Aemelia, launches into the Beau Monde, and soon becomes acquainted with the celebrated lady——, who at his request in a select party gratifies his curiosity with the memoirs of her life, which take up the greatest part of the third volume.

Frankenstein Chapter 23 Summary & Analysis

That this Author, however, has no such design, may be fairly presumed from his declining all attempts to bias us by any remarks of his own.
