One Issue Leads to Another: Issue Spirals and the Sino

But the process for both countries has been difficult and it has been over two decades before both countries are recognised as having 'free markets' by the international community. In the early 1970s the North Vietnamese leaders resorted to various methods of forced assimilation.

COLLATERAL DAMAGE: Sino

When communism came to Vietnam, the overseas Chinese were seen as the obvious 'traitor' within the country, ready to oppose an ideology completely opposite to their own capitalist style. The Le dynastic rulers would soon revive tributary relations with the Ming and adopt certain Ming court practices in the administration of the Le state, but only after the threat of outside interference had been eliminated. Now the situation is more critical because Washington did not demonstrate its concerns as it had shown in past.
