BAE accused of secretly paying £1bn to Saudi prince

Marconi Electronic Systems was the defence subsidiary of British engineering firm the GEC , dealing largely in military , as well as naval and land systems.

How big is the UK aerospace industry?

In June 2002, BAE Systems confirmed it was in takeover discussions with , an American aerospace, automotive and defence business. That is why we are ranging so widely on the issue of nationalisation and the way in which further State ownership and public borrowing have led to the depression and slough of despond which we were in in January this year. I agree that some private enterprise companies do not adapt, but they do not survive.

UK Manufacturing Statistics

London's 1996 export figures showed a banner year for the UK defense industry, with more than 5 billion pounds worth of exports representing a 25 percent share of the world defense market.

The review also confirmed the attractiveness of the land systems sector and, with two acquisitions in 2004 and 2005, BAE moved from a limited land systems supplier to the second largest such company in the world. This all eventually led, in 1986, to the European Fighter Aircraft EFA programme. In August 1989 Arlington Securities Plc was acquired for £278 million, partly as diversification but also to apply its property management skills to BAe's own industrial sites which were extensive and becoming surplus to its requirements.
