Such unfavourable press has probably contributed to increased use of the recently available non-ergot DA, pramipexole. Another strong indication of that theory was that inhabitants of the zone with the most circles had a historical tendency for making large-scale formations, including stone circles such as Stonehenge, burial mounds such as , long barrows such as , and. The researcher Jeremy Northcote found that crop circles in the UK in 2002 were not spread randomly across the landscape.
