And he, Nick Everard, even more so over Sarah? And in the two years since then he'd observed what had seemed to be similar reactions in other men, after action.

Patrol to the Golden Horn by Alexander Fullerton

It had been a weird feeling, in those early days of June 1916: as if that sort of rubbish didn't count now, as if the experience of battle had taken one out clear of the morass of petty restrictions and red-tape that he'd often fallen foul of. However, it is two years since an Allied submarine has passed through the Dardanelles successfully—the narrow straits are littered with minefields and nets, and are continually patrolled by gunboats. But it has been two years since an Allied submarine passed through the narrow straits successfully, littered as they are with minefields, nets and depth charges dropped by the gunboats endlessly patrolling above.

. Generally, a great book to read.

The Golden Horn

But this is now the second book by Alexander Fullerton that I have enjoyed, so I will have to look out for more. Four-funnelled, Bristol class, with two six-inch and ten four-inch guns.

Patrol to the Golden Horn by Alexander Fullerton

A gentle read as war stories go. Other than Galipoli I have never really looked into it, so this book was as much an education as a diversion. After reading this book; it was interesting to read the true life events which contributed to the story.

It was still a novelty; and it had been a present from his now famous uncle - Hugh Everard had become a rear-admiral after Jutland, but he was now a vice-admiral and Sir Hugh. It is vital that she is destroyed, and the plan is to send an E-class submarine in through the Dardanelles to sink her unawares. I had no idea the fighting was as savage and widespread as it was.
