Women are central to Australia's history. Why have we forgotten them?

What was little known was that from the early 1950s Bob Santamaria set up an equivalent body in Asia. The exhibition aims to evoke change, asking visitors to have courage to make pedagogical, cultural, social and political decisions to uphold the rights of each child and to make visible the competent child, the competent teacher and the competent parent in their services. This was not restricted to Great Britain, but it had especial vigour there.

Visions of Australia: Environments in History

Australia continued to pay for the upkeep of the empty detention center until late 2007. To examine first contact in Australia from a different perspective, Flinders University academics Dr Gillian Dooley and Dr Danielle Clode have edited a new book that presents an alternative view of early coastal contact history in Australia. In 1595 Mendaña sailed again but failed to rediscover the Solomons.
