The Adolph Lewisohn Collection of modern French paintings and sculptures (1968 edition)

There are always challenges inherent in that pursuit and this painting is a wonderful example of that kind of challenge.

Lewisohn, Sam A. 1884

The item The Adolph Lewisohn Collection of modern French paintings and sculptures : with an essay on French painting during the nineteenth century and notes on each artist's life and works, by Stephan Bourgeois represents a specific, individual, material embodiment of a distinct intellectual or artistic creation found in. Opened in 1955, the Clark houses exceptional European and American paintings and sculpture, extensive collections of master prints and drawings, English silver, and early photography. In both, the emperor rides a rearing horse positioned similarly to that beneath the Roman captain in The Martyrdom of Saint Sulpicius.

The Adolph Lewisohn Collection of modern French paintings and sculptures, : with an essay on French painting during the nineteenth century and notes on each artist's life and works,

The work is an excellent example of his creative process and brushwork, his sensitivity to the use of accents of color, and ultimately his ability to create a powerful and emotionally charged scene of martyrdom. Author Title The Adolph Lewisohn Collection of modern French paintings and sculptures, by Stephan Bourgeois.
