that more advanced nations have more to benefit from economic interdependence with smaller, less developed nations.

Chapter II. Two Current Issues Facing Developing Countries : World Economic Outlook, April 2005 : Globalization and External Balances:

For example, there is much reason to believe that the US and Germany have much more in common, institutionally, than does Mexico and the US, or Germany and Hungary, owing to commonalities such as their long-term membership in the Organization for Cooperation and Development OECD.

Foreign dependency

Overall, the non-core upper tier decreased its distance from the core, while the weakest segments of the periphery performed the worst in terms of mobility. So, the extent to which a country is opened relative to the rest of the world determines amount of FDI it will attract.
