National Health Service

Part of the rationale for this approach was that different regional service providers could be swapped in or out if and when other regional service providers failed. Total purchasing is an experimental extension of general practitioner GP fundholding GPFH through which designated GP practices receive budgets to purchase potentially all of the services received by their patients.

Occupancy rate of adult critical care beds is shown to have adverse effect on the quality standards in terms of mortality. The differences noted in the responses of the male and female managers appear consistent with previous study. In the public sector, officials and bureaucrats are paid regardless of their performance and their failures.
