He returned to India in 1908 abandoning the loose brushwork technique inherited from Sargent and became increasingly committed to reviving the traditional style of Moghul painting. The buildings were expansive; the Palace of Engineering 500,000 square feet and the Palace of Industry were the two largest exhibition buildings ever built, at least that was the claim. The British and the Dominion governments, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, Burma and Ireland and the Colonial governments could appoint their own architect for their pavilions, assisted by the guidance of Tommy Tait.
