Market forecast: Uncertainty looms

The scientific evidence suggests that we need to take action now, and the UK Government is making this a priority. Even though material input costs are up for 2020, nonresidential inflation in 2020 remained low, probably influenced by a reduction in margins due to the decline in new construction starts -24%, which is a decline in new work to bid on. Finally, the BER publishes the — a measure of the percentage change in average building costs in South Africa.

Some analysts were suggesting we would experience deflation. Nonresidential starts are projected to increase 4% in 2021, so that could lead to some recovery of margins, however, even with 4% growth in new starts, that comes after a 24% drop in 2020, so remains still 20% below 2019. Regular monthly updates to the 2-year quarterly forecasts are provided in Update.

For its voluminous page count, the Brexit Trade and Cooperation Agreement signed between the EU and UK at the end of 2020 is widely regarded as a thin or minimal trade agreement between the two parties, limited in its scope. The cost index moved higher on the strength of quicker demand from catch-up activity, tight supply chain conditions in some parts, higher international logistics costs, and stockpiling for the then impending Brexit deadline. AMRS switched to the pack of top gainer list last week, from top loser list in the prior week.
