Contrary to popular belief, the average negative effect of retention on achievement is even greater than the negative effect on emotional adjustment and self-concept. Out-of-home placements may pose additional risks for the abused or neglected child, and the trauma of separation from one's biological family can also be damaging.

Child Maltreatment and Juvenile Delinquency

However, not all children who are abused go on to engage in juvenile delinquency, and not all juvenile delinquents have histories of child abuse. This would seem particularly important given that the number of reported cases of child neglect far surpasses those of physical abuse in national statistics.
