Sprightly Running by John Wain

Wain not always to his own advantage in his life is, however, not only very self-conscious; he also maintains an extraordinary tightrope balance between apprehensive pessimism always toppling at the edge of bitterness and a self-esteem that doggedly defies disappointment and bad luck. Apart from occasional holidays in the English countryside and in Europe, he spent most of his life in his rooms at Greys Inn Place. It was the second edition of the memoir, including all of Wittgenstein's letters to the author: in one of them he warmly recommends the Prayers and Meditations.
